TEXTE DU PROJET DE LOI

Article unique.— Est approuvée la Convention de l’Institut Forestier Européen, faite à Joensuu, le 28 août 2003.

*

EXPOSE DES MOTIFS

L’Institut forestier européen (EFI) a été créé en 1993 pour répondre à un besoin de renforcement de la coopération scientifique européenne en matière forestière et pour stimuler la prise en compte de la recherche forestière au niveau européen. Cette création est dans la droite ligne de la première conférence ministérielle pour la protection des forêts en Europe, en 1990, dont la 6ème résolution préconisait la constitution d’un réseau européen de recherche sur les écosystèmes forestiers. Ce réseau européen a été élaboré sur l’instigation de la Finlande simultanément à l’organisation, en 1993, de la deuxième conférence sur la protection des forêts en Europe, sous la forme d’une organisation non gouvernementale destinée à accueillir, parmi ses membres, des organismes à caractère scientifique, pédagogique, industriel ou commercial de tous les pays d’Europe.

La mission de l’Institut forestier européen (EFI) est de promouvoir, conduire et coordonner la recherche forestière au niveau paneuropéen et d’en diffuser les résultats à toutes les parties intéressées de manière à assurer la conservation et la gestion durable des forêts en Europe. Il ne s’agit pas d’un institut de recherche organisé en laboratoires; il mène principalement des études fondées sur l’analyse et la synthèse de données existant à grande échelle et permettant d’approfondir des phénomènes tels que les changements de productivité forestière en Europe, la fixation de carbone par les forêts européennes, les scénarios d’utilisation des terres, le marché européen des bois, …; il répond ainsi à des questions dans les quatre grands domaines de l’écologie et de la gestion des forêts, du marché des bois, de la politique forestière, enfin des systèmes d’information sur les forêts.

L’Institut forestier européen s’est révélé un forum efficace pour rencontrer et faire dialoguer chercheurs et gestionnaires, une excellente „école“ également pour de jeunes chercheurs. Il a aussi largement contribué, par des projets conduits en toute transparence, à obtenir des résultats originaux (par exemple sur les changements de productivité en Europe), et à faire naître des thématiques nouvelles (foresterie urbaine, conversion des plantations en forêts mélangées, …).

Après dix ans d’existence (150 membres dans toute l’Europe) et d’un incontestable succès, l’Institut forestier européen a décidé de poursuivre son internationalisation en changeant de statut pour devenir une organisation internationale dont les nouveaux membres sont des pays, tandis que les anciens membres (organismes à caractère scientifique, pédagogique, industriel ou commercial) deviennent membres associés. La nouvelle convention a été signée en 2003 par 20 pays dont le Luxembourg, le 7 octobre 2003. Elle est entrée en vigueur le 4 septembre 2005. Au 31 décembre 2007, elle a été ratifiée par 17 pays.

Le Luxembourg ne dispose pas d’un institut de recherche forestière à proprement parler. Certaines recherches ont été initiées par la Cellule CREBS du Centre de Recherche Lippmann, mais la plupart font l’objet de conventions entre l’administration des Eaux et Forêts et des instituts étrangers de plusieurs pays européens. La recherche forestière au Luxembourg est de ce fait ancrée depuis toujours dans une logique et une dimension européenne que l’adhésion à la Convention de l’Institut forestier européen pourrait encore renforcer et consolider.
